I treat every online store as a data ecosystem — auditing funnels, testing content, and turning numbers into growth.

The discipline came first: six years spent safeguarding data integrity across regulated, multi-market environments. What followed was applying that same rigor to growth — auditing content, testing checkout flows, and building email programs that convert. The output changes with each project; the method doesn't: look at what the data actually shows, test a fix, and keep only what moves the number.
